Food giant promotes diners' informed choice

By George Fournier

When you go to a restaurant, you often have to choose between a menu that lists the ingredients of each dish and one that doesn't. The new menu at the new restaurant in the heart of the city is a bit different. It lists the ingredients of each dish, and it also lists the source of each ingredient. This is a first for the city, and it's a good idea. It helps diners make informed choices about the food they eat.

Understand that the new menu is not a gimmick. It's a serious effort to help diners make informed choices about the food they eat. The restaurant is committed to transparency and to providing the best possible dining experience.
